

Deep Writing: Solution, Coagulation, Articulation

An online academic writing instruction and support group led by Craig Chalquist, PhD.

Alchemists of old used the motto “Dissolve and Coagulate”: unstick the work to get it moving, then bring it all together to create the Great Work of transformation. This is also the basic philosophy of our problem-solving writing group. Writing coalesces when it flows.

You might like what our group offers if these flow-stoppers sound familiar:

- Feeling stuck or lost in your academic writing
- Wondering how to keep your genuine voice while writing research
- Feeling confused about research methodologies and when to use which
- Wondering about how much personal experience to disclose
- Lacking alchemical fire (passion) for the work
- Procrastinating or inner criticizing getting in your way
- Setting boundaries so you can get your work done
- Writing deeply for non-academic audiences
- Publishing and promoting what you write
- Promoting and presenting skills for introverts.

Cost: $15/group meeting via Zoom. We’ll meet for at least an hour per session (they are ongoing) and will keep the groups small. Bring your writing questions, needs, blockages, and dilemmas. The meetings will be entirely about getting what you need to move forward.

Facilitator:

Craig Chalquist, PhD is a professor, graduate research and writing instructor, dissertation chair, former associate provost, former dissertation office director, journal editor, and author of fifteen books and various papers and book chapters. Visit his webpage at Chalquist.com.

To find out more: craig@chalquist.com.